By our centenary year, 2026, we want to significantly build on the successes we have already accomplished so far. Many of the reasons behind these projects stem directly from student feedback, such as the need for more study space and better technical resources. Other key factors address sustainability, such as improving energy efficiency and reducing our carbon emissions. We also have an environmental sustainability strategy that revolves around six themes: community engagement, hospitality operations, waste management, biodiversity, and carbon management. These are embedded across the University's curriculum. While these projects focus on our long-term ambitions, we will be taking great care to minimise the risk of disruption for students currently studying at the University.
