Fred Astaire in the film L'inarrivable felicità (1941) Oscar suorario 1950 Fred Astaire, the art name of Frederick Austerlitz (May 10, 1899 - June 22, 1987) was a dancer, actor, choreographer and American singer who was able to combine exquisitely ballot, music and cinema and master of tip-tap. Insigned of a Honorary Academy Award in 1950, Astaire was active in theater and cinema for seventy years, during which he played thirty-one musical films. He is remembered, among other things, for working with Ginger Rogers, with whom he shot ten films. George Balanchine and Rudolf Nureev considered him the greatest dancer of the 20th century[1] and is admitted to him[2] to be the most influential dancer in the history of musicals on the big and small screen. The American Film Institute has included Astaire in fifth place among the greatest stars in film history. [3] Biography Fred and his sister Adele in 1906 The son of an Austrian immigrant, Frederic Fritz Austerlitz (born September 8, 1868 as Friedrich Emanuel Austerlitz, whose parents were converted to Catholicism,) and a passion descended from Lutheran Germans, Johanna Ann Geilus, Frederick Austerlitz, this his true name, revealed a great dance as a child. When his father lost his job funny, the family moved to New York in 1905 to have more chances for the children's career, which began their studies at the Academy of Theatre and Cultural Arts at the Alvent Master School to learn how to act and sing. The mother suggested changing the family name from Austerlitz to the most practical Astaire, to avoid unhappy approach to the battle of the same name. Together with her sister Adele, she claims to perform in a series of theatre and vaudeville performances in the Midwest and some cities in the South, thanks to a contract signed with the Orpheum Circuit chain. At the age of 14, Fred assumed responsibility for the choice of music for their shows and outdoor jumps to develop his incessant research novelty and perfection in the composition of new steps. Nights for thetheir sharpening, Fred and Adele successfully debuted on Broadway in 1917, resulting in a real triumph in magazines such as Lady, Be Good by George and Ira Gershwin. In the mid-1920s, they landed in London's theatres, and were successful. In 1932, Adele married Lord Charles Cavendish, the secondborn of the ninth Duke of Devonshire and abandoned the scenes. Fred directed his own business approaching the cinema. Fred Astaire in a dance number with her sister Adele The ascent as Magro dancer, of slender height[4], the legs "straordinarily long"[5] and elegant, Astaire maturò un stile del tutto personale. With the unbridled turmoil of his feet he gianted in the tip-tap, making this dance a real form of art. In his choreography he tried to combine the rhythm of jazz music with the elegance of the European one. He was featured in the cinema next to Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, in the film La danza di Venere (1933), in which he played a cameo in the role of himself in a number of dance, as he was already a famous dancer. In the same year, written by RKO, he inaugurated the artistic partnership with the young and charming Ginger Rogers, with whom he will turn in all ten films, starting from the musical comedy Carioca (1933). With Ginger Rogers in the film I look for my love (1934) Fred and Ginger, an amazing duo for rhythm, class and harmony, played during the 1930s in numerous musical films, such as I look for my love (1934), Cylinder Hat (1935), considered their masterpiece. Following the fleet (1936), I want to dance with you (1937), and The Life of Vernon and Irene Castle (1939). After the end of the partnership, the two were torn to work together ten years later in the Broadway musical I Barkleys (1949). After the artistic separation from Rogers, starting in the 1940s, Fred Astaire worked as a free-lance for several production cases, but mostly for the Metro Goldwyn Mayer. In his dance numbers he was accompanied by other splendid actresses, such as Rita Hayworth in L'inarrivabile felicità (1941) and You've never been so beautiful (1941), Judy Garland in Ti I loved without notice (1948) by Charles Walters. Cyd Charisse in Show of Varieties (1953), splendid music directed by Vincente Minnelli, and Audrey Hepburn in Cinderella in Paris (1957) by Stanley Donen. From dancer to actor Smissione il frac. Astaire will provide other great evidence of actor in non-musical films: to remember in this regard the role of the scientist unholy in the dramatic The last beach (1959) of Stanley Kramer, film of denunciation on nuclear, alongside Ava Gardner and Gregory Peck, and that of the beloved diplomat in the comedy Richard Quikne's (1962) guesthouse. In 1968 he exhibited alongside Petula Clark in his latest musical film, Sulle ali dell'arcobaleno by Francis Ford Coppola, which had little luck both at the box office and at theHe followed a participation in the blow was perfect, but (1969) of alf kjellin, but also this film did not succeed.
