Above: Students write a poem about their favorite colors and then color their ice cream scoops that same color. Note: This set of poetry lesson plans uses the words color and favorite on the student worksheets and on the ice cream templates. There is a second copy of the worksheets and templates in this set of poetry teaching resources which contains the spelling colour and favourite for teachers in countries that spell these words this way. COLOR POEMS: These unique ice cream shaped poetry templates are a fun way for your students to write a poem about their favorite colors. For example, if a student's favorite color is blue, she could write a poem about the ocean and then color her ice cream scoops blue. On the other hand, a student who loves green could write a poem about crocodiles and he would color his ice cream scoops green. Students cut out their ice cream scoops and cone templates along the thick borders and then glue the ice cream scoops on top of their cones. When this unique poetry project has been assembled, your students will have fun ice cream cones projects to write their color poems on. Since each student will color his or her ice cream cone their favorite color, these ice cream poems will make a very colorful poetry bulletin board display in your classroom. This poetry display will end up looking like a rainbow of different ice cream colors and your classroom bulletin board will be sure to capture everyone's attention! This COLOR POEMS set of teaching resources includes: first draft writing worksheet black and white ice cream scoop and cone templates 8 different colors of ice cream scoop templates color cone template matching 5 page bulletin board display banner Everything that you need to complete these color poems is included in this set of poetry lesson plans. All that you will need is scissors, coloring pencils, and glue. For creative writing assignments, I believe that it is important for students to go through the steps of the writing process. For this reason, my students never begin writing their poems on their final draft ice cream poetry templates, instead they write on first draft worksheets. Then, they edit and revise their color poems on their own, with a partner, or in individual writing conferences with me. Below is an example of the first draft worksheet that is included in this set of resources. After your students have edited and revised the first drafts of their COLOR POEMS, you should give them their final draft ice cream templates. The ice cream templates measure 17 inches in length and 6 inches in width after they have been assembled together. These ice cream templates have thick borders, so it is easy for students to cut out their ice cream poetry templates themselves. Above: For the top scoop of ice cream, students draw a picture inside the middle area and then color the border area their favorite color. For the bottom scoop of ice cream, students write their color poems on the lines and then color this scoop of ice cream their favorite color. Above: Students glue the two ice cream scoops on top of the cone template and write the name of their favorite color on the cone template. When I am introducing this poetry assignment to my students, I like to begin by sharing my color poem with my students. At the front of the classroom, I display an example of what the final draft ice cream cone templates look like. By providing a visual example at the very beginning of this lesson activity, my students know what their poetry projects will look like when they have completed their final drafts. For creative writing assignments, when I give my students fun poetry templates to write on, I have found that they tend to use their best effort, and they are more careful to not make careless spelling, grammar, and punctuation errors. I have included color ice cream templates for you to use as a visual example to share with your students, and so that you will not have to spend time coloring these ice cream templates yourself. Color Poems: Example of color ice cream scoop templates. Color Poems: Example of color ice cream cone templates. This set of poetry lesson plans contains 8 different colors of ice cream scoops: red, yellow, blue, orange, green, pink, purple, and brown (see below). You can choose to print out multiple copies of these 8 colorful ice cream templates and give them to your students to write their poems on instead of using the black and white ice cream templates. If you use the color ice cream templates with your students, your classroom bulletin board display of your students' poems will be a bright array of rainbow colors. Your colorful ice cream poetry classroom display will be sure to capture everyone's attention! Above: 8 Colorful Ice Cream Scoop Templates I know that it takes teachers a lot of valuable time to assemble their bulletin board displays. Many teachers spend hours of time cutting out large display letters or making a banner at home on their computers. This time is valuable and better spent on developing your classroom curriculum, so I have included a matching 5 page banner for your poetry bulletin board display. If you have access to a laminating machine, you can laminate your banner so that it is durable and you can use it year after year for bulletin board displays of these ice cream poems. Sincerely, Heidi McDonald Creator and Site Manager Unique Teaching Resources Click on the links below to visit these creative writing pages: Click here to go to my home page: Unique Teaching Resources Objective: Students will be able to create alliterations based on the poem "Bleezer's Ice Cream" by Jack Prelutsky. Vocabulary: Alliteration Time: Approximately 1 hour and 30 minutes Difficulty:  What You Will Need: 12x18 Paper, Pencils, Sharpies, and Colored Pencils or Crayons Preparing For The Project: Introduce the concept of Alliteration to your students. Read the poem, "Bleezer's Ice Cream" by Jack Prelutsky to the students. If you would prefer, there is a clever video of a man reading the poem in a silly voice with fun animation on YouTube. The link is below: Work through the different flavors of ice cream with the students and decide which flavors are alliterations and which flavors are not (for example, "Cocoa Mocha Macaroni" is not an alliteration, but "Checkerberry Cheddar Chew" is). On a piece of scratch paper, have the students write out a list of 5 new Bleezer-style flavors that are alliterations. To make the flavors crazy, I often ask them to pair 1 dinner flavor with 1 dessert flavor (Taco Tapioca Twist). I also advise the students to keep their flavors to food items only, or some students have the tendency to become gruesome. Finally I write a list of adjectives we might typically see at the end of ice cream flavors. Here is my list: Twist, Dip, Swirl, Sherbet, Nut, Fudge, Chip, Chunk, Chew, Cluster, Ripple, and Ribbon Project time: 1. Guide the student through the drawing process using the drawing guide PDF below. Bleezer's Ice Cream 2. Pass out crayons or Colored pencils and allow the students to color their work. Have the students think about their flavors, and encourage them to chose their colors based on their original Bleezer-style flavors. As students are coloring their work, I walk around and correct spelling. 3. Students can write their flavors in their best penmanship along side their ice cream scoops. If I have time, I lightly write lines with a ruler that students can use as a guide for writing. Assessment: Hang the artwork around the room. Have students make a list of their favorite alliterations from their classmates' work. Discuss their findings. If students have access to ipads, students could blog about their experience and post a picture of their work. Students could ask readers to respond to their post by providing their own Bleezer-style ice cream alliteration. Teachers can tweet a link to student blogs for more traffic; the #commentsforkids will guide other educators to interact with your students' writings.
